3. The Library subscribes to over 16,000 periodicals, most of them available in one of our over 193 databases. A list of Library and Information Science databases is available in Articles & Databases tab of the Library web site in the Title or Subject link.

4. Some recommended library science databases are: Library and Information Science Source, NoveList Plus and CHOICE Reviews. LIS research guides as well as GSLIS class pages are available at http://research.dom.edu/LIS. The guides contain suggested databases, books and other resources to complete your research and class assignments.

5. All Library databases are available off campus through the Library web site. You need a Dominican username and password from IT to access them. To learn more about using the Library when you’re not on campus, watch the Library Help for Off-Campus Students video at research.dom.edu/tutorials at the bottom of the page.

6. A list of library science journals is available on the Journals & Newspapers tab of the Library web site. To see the list, choose Social Sciences from the drop down menu and scroll down to Library & Information Science. Though most journals are available electronically, some are only available in print. Print journals are shelved on the lower level of the Library.

7. If the Library does not have the full text of an article you need, request a copy from another library in the Request an Article from Another Library link under Articles & Databases on the Library’s homepage. When in a database, use the Find Full Text in Other Databases (or similar text) link to make sure we do not own the full text. For more information, please visit research.dom.edu/tutorials and click on the “Articles” tab and watch the first video.

8. The Library belongs to the CARLI consortium, which allows you to request books from other Illinois college and university libraries. If we don’t have the book you need, request it from I-Share, the catalog found through the Search I-Share link on the Library’s homepage. You need to set up an account in I-Share and need your student ID # to request books. The Finding Books in I-Share videos at research.dom.edu/tutorials under the “Find Books” tab explains how to find books at Crown and through I-Share, and how to set up your I-Share account.

9. The Library provides a browser toolbar for Google Chrome and Firefox. The toolbar can search the Dominican, I-Share, and Worldcat catalogs; as well as journal and article databases. To download the toolbar, click on Research Help in the sidebar on the Library landing page, and then select “Browser Toolbar”.

10. The Library offers a series of research lifesaver workshops. For upcoming workshops, please visit http://www.dom.edu/library/instruction/workshops. To register please click on the workshop you would like to attend.
